INDIANA UNIVERSITY

Emily Metzgar is an associate professor in the Media School at Indiana University and affiliated faculty in the university's Department of International Studies. A former diplomat, policy analyst, opinion writer, and youth advocate, she focuses her writing and research on foreign affairs, media in American politics, and the importance of service-learning in the college classroom. She has an undergraduate degree from the University of Michigan and graduate degrees from The George Washington University's Elliott School of International Affairs and Louisiana State University's Manship School of Mass Communication. When she isn't writing, teaching, or traveling she can be found wandering the trails of Southern Indiana with her faithful hound, a seventy-pound labradoodle named Harry.
